

John Dagle, MD, PhD attended medical school and graduate school at the University of Iowa, finishing in 1991. He also completed his Pediatric and Neonatology training at the University of Iowa. He joined the Pediatric Faculty at the University of Iowa in 1998 as a staff neonatologist and is currently an Associate Professor of Pediatrics and Biochemistry. In addition to his clinical activities, he has interests in research, education and administration. His research interests include the genetic contributions to prematurity and the complications of prematurity. He is the Medical Director of the Neonatal/Pediatric Transport Program and the Director of the Neonatal/Perinatal Medicine Fellowship Program at the University of Iowa Children's Hospital. He joined the Iowa Statewide Perinatal Care Program as an Associate Director in 2011.